Storyline

In the Pinochet dictatorship, Mariano Jara, a successful communist businessman, plans a risky strategy to continue operating for his political party without being discovered by the oppressive organs: camouflage himself among the highest hierarchs and intelligence agents of the regime.

His businessman disguise, a magnetic personality, but mainly his money, will allow him to win the sympathy of murderers and torturers. In his shops he installed persecuted companions and in the cellar he hides his weapons to confront the Dictator.

For years, always between life and death, he manages to maintain his disguise, but a subtle error allows his biggest pursuer to catch and stop him, while looking for evidence to blame him.

Argument

Mariano, a wealthy businessman, who in the midst of the dictatorship, publicly declares himself grateful to General Pinochet for having saved Chile from "international Marxism", a friend of the most distinguished of the Chilean right-wing and of the director of the CNI, an assiduous of the Santiaguina night where he rubs shoulders with the Pinochetista fanfare, he is, in fact, an active militant of the military apparatus of the Communist Party of Chile. Its task: to protect the arms of the community.

Originally from a poor family, he knew how to get ahead thanks to the work ethic instilled by his mother and soon amassed a small fortune in the field of electronics. In those years, he meets a communist who would become a friend and mentor; he is the one who enters him into the ranks of the Communist Party, where Mariano finds the family he never had and where he assumes the first tasks of protecting the party's brigade muralists.

After a few months of the military coup and in the midst of fierce repression Mariano is contacted by his mentor to resume political militancy, as part of the military apparatus of the resistance: he must be in charge of creating the bases to hide the weapons that the Party has and decides not to occupy them, for now.

Soon, the 16 "Nadir" electronics stores, scattered throughout the country, becoming a hiding place for weapons, PC meeting points and a refuge for militants, as employees.

They are times of hard repression and Mariano realizes that a good formula not to arouse suspicions is precisely to camouflage himself among his enemies. Thus, using his reputation as a recognized entrepreneur and his sympathy skills, Mariano manages to get into the Santiaguina night and nurture a partying profile, linking up with the most sought-after artists and vedettes of the time; with fatal consequences for his family life, since his wife cannot stand his double life and leaves him. Moreover, his daughter, who still remembers him with a fist held high in the concentrations of support for Allende, takes away the greeting for "traitor". And only later, when she joins the armed struggle, he will confess his truth and reestablish their relationship.

But the more dangerous the tasks he assumes in the Party, the more he must camouflage himself among his enemies. Aware that money is power, he manages to do business with high-level government officials, including the director of the National Intelligence Center (CNI) and even with Generals of the Board such as César Mendoza, chief of police. However, the powerful and ruthless agent of the CNI Álvaro Corbalán never believes his facade and always has him in his sight, and although he stops him once, his high contacts save him.

Entering the eighties, the Communist Party proclaims its policy of Mass Rebellion, including the military option. Manuel Rodríguez Patriotic Front appears, a secret armed organization, inspired by the urban guerrilla, and Mariano gets involved more and more: he helps in the logistics of Carrizal Bajo (This was called the operation of the largest weapons in Latin America), he transfers weapons and buys plots in his name, which are used as a cover up to conceal a quantity of weapons. When they are discovered and repression arrives, Mariano hides persecuted militants and saves all the weapons he can. The repression unleashes everything and he loses his best companions, including Carlitos, his nephew and confidant. And, later, his daughter, who does not follow the orders of the party when he calls his militancy to disarm, to become part of the transition, which is already approaching.

A militant reveals him under torture and Mariano is imprisoned by Álvaro Corbalán. This time his friendships do not save him. Although they torture him, Mariano does not say a word. After a while they send him to the Penitentiary where they try to poison him several times, but he manages to maintain alive. Finally, he is released, with immigrational hold, and manages to escape the country with false documentation.

As an epilogue, already in the 90s, Mariano returns to Chile and is related to the Communist Party in mutually beneficial businesses. However, the authorities of the community cheated him through an export business of food products to Cuba. Mariano loses a large amount of money and goes to jail for a second time, for the second time thanks to the party that he loves. It is the bitter end of an agent who in hard times played his life for his party.

Mariano Jara

Main character of this story is a famous businessman, owner of a chain of appliance stores called Nadir. He is also the inventor of the radio of the same name. Owner of the most famous nightclub in Chile, the Flamingo Club, is also equestrian and head of the Nadir Stud, with fifteen horses that are his property.

Secretly, Mariano is the warehouseman of the hidden weapons of the Communist Party of Chile, after the dictatorship of Augusto Pinochet was given the task of exterminating them. He is the man who has kept the armament of his party since before the coup, a member of the communist military apparatus, a convincing type of guy, who must camouflage himself under the figure of an ultra-rightist, friend of the repressive agents and related at high level with authorities of government to hide his other side, the one that, if known, would cost him his life.

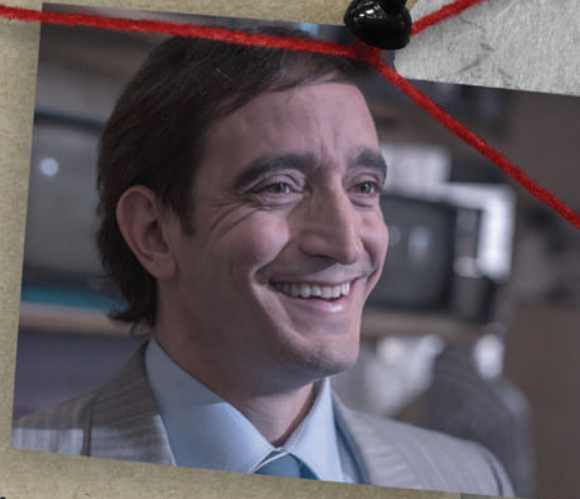

Wendy

She is the most important vedette in Chile, the dream of many generations of men and the envy of many women. The body desired by all and in whom Mariano is set to make her his lover. In the middle of the lights of the nightclubs, the casino and the horse races, they both fall in love. But Wendy has an explosive personality, mixes alcohol with pills, enters hysterical states, is paranoid and violent. She fears that Mariano will leave her for another, so she suspects him constantly. She seems not to find peace. At the same time, she has loves of youth, those who are true, away from the lights of the show, those lights that harass her from the inside, like a cry that leads her to treasure the real emotions, always in conflict with her need for notoriety, to remain the Queen of the night.

Carlos González

He is Mariano's nephew and the only one who knows his true face as a warehouseman of the party's weapons. Therefore, he runs the risks of that life, as a faithful squire. In his favor, he has a charismatic personality. He is always the soul of the party, the man in charge of making entertaining evenings, telling jokes, drinking, proposing new places of entertainment on the night of the dictatorship.

Always attentive, is the pair of ears that Mariano lacks, willing to risk his life for him. At the same time, he is a poor boy, who in his childhood had very few opportunities, endowed with a "natural" intelligence, which leads him to observe what others are not able to notice.

Paco Letelier

He is one of Mariano's closest friends and one of the men he chose to forge his camouflage. During the day he is a police officer who gives nice advice of transit on television. At night, with his friends he is an unpredictable guy, capable of unloading his weapon to the sky in the midst of endless revelry, taking drugs by piece, playing even what he does not have, in the casino and horse racing. Charming with friends, with a hidden side, that is unrecognizable.

Álvaro Corbalán

He is the operational chief of the famous terrorist police of the dictatorship, the CNI. Doubts of Mariano, suspects that behind his image of right-wing businessman, a terrorist hides. Corbalán is a guy who, like Mariano, likes the night and the show, always accompanied by beautiful women. In his leisure time he is an innate singer, a frustrated artist.

As a repressive agent he is characterized as a tireless persecutor of communism in all its forms, the right arm of Augusto Pinochet, protagonist of some of the most atrocious crimes and massacres occurred during the eighties in Chile.

The Night Watchman

He is one of the leaders of the communist military apparatus and nightclub of the Nadir headquarters. Close friend of Mariano, by day is his employee, but at night, his boss in the task of hiding the weapons that the Communist Party protects from the dictatorship and that, over time, begins to enter Chile increasingly with the aim of overthrowing to the dictatorship. He is a "military man", trained abroad, probably in the Soviet Union, an expert in armaments, and the father of a family he must protect. He is also an observer of Mariano and his nocturnal revelry, calling him to order when he considers that he exceeds his role as agent.

Rebecca

She is Mariano's wife, the woman who lives and organizes her house when Mariano is at work or partying with friends and women. She is a character who must support a lot of the weight of the decision that Mariano has taken, maintaining a homely facade that hurts her, because she feels humiliated. She is a teacher, a cultured woman who without knowing the role of her husband in the resistance, tries to remind him that he has a communist soul and that he is getting farther and farther away from his nature, lost in drinking and in the night.

Plotman

This is the man whose job is to maintain a plot as if it were simply an agricultural site outside the capital. At the same time he is a convinced communist, who transfers the arms of the party from one place to another, through his peasant façade. He is a good man who, given his position away from city work, observes and gives advice to the members of the story.

Marcelo

He is an agent of the Directorate of Intelligence of the Army who, in the midst of the dictatorship, begins to work as a bodyguard of Mariano doing a job attached to the agent. He is a guy who seeks only easy money, who believes in nothing more than the established order that the dictatorship must maintain, at any cost, from a happy and flattering personality.

Robert

He is Marcelo's partner with a double function: agent and bodyguard of Mariano. Unlike his partner, he has a violent and bitter character, which makes him fulfill the same function from a more sincere and violent perspective.
